1. The first part of the document is a letter from the President of the United States to the Congress.

It is dated the 1st of January, 1801, and is addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives. The President expresses his pleasure in the meeting of the new Congress, and wishes to inform them of the state of the Union.

He then proceeds to give a detailed account of the events of the past year, including the war with France, the peace negotiations, and the internal affairs of the country.

He also mentions the death of George Washington, and expresses his grief at the loss of the first President of the United States.

The President then discusses the state of the Union, and the progress of the government. He mentions the various laws that have been passed, and the measures that have been taken to strengthen the country.

He concludes his letter by expressing his confidence in the future of the United States, and his belief that the new Congress will continue to support the principles of liberty and justice for all.

The letter is signed by James Madison, the fourth President of the United States, and is dated the 1st of January, 1801.

The second part of the document is a report from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Congress, dated the 1st of January, 1801.

The report gives a detailed account of the financial state of the United States, and the measures that have been taken to manage the government's finances.
